Why Oxford Brookes?

To ensure our teaching is kept relevant, lecturers are active in research, with many world leaders in their fields. We also nurture our ties with local businesses and science and research communities. This gives you first-hand expertise that you can put into practice and apply to real-life situations.

Award-winning spaces

Our innovative courses, outstanding teaching and strong industry links are just some of the reasons Oxford Brookes is a great place to study. Another is our award-winning John Henry Brookes Building, which is at the heart of our Headington campus. It brings together stunning student spaces, inspiring teaching areas and a hi-tech library. This building has transformed the way students learn, live and socialise on campus.

Oxford Brookes is one of the UK’s leading modern universities and enjoys an international reputation for teaching excellence, exciting student life and strong links with local, national and international business and industry.

The Complete University Guide 2018
Oxford

Steeped in history with an exciting mix of cultures, Oxford is an inspirational student city. It is also one of Europe’s major educational, scientific and technological centres. The city’s libraries, museums and creative venues will stimulate your ideas and challenge your thinking. In addition to our own state-of-the-art library resources, postgraduate students have access to the world-renowned Bodleian libraries.

“Oxford Brookes’ location is unparalleled – having access to the Bodleian Library, and being located in a city with fantastic case studies in conservation ultimately made it clear that Brookes was where I wanted to be.”

LAUREN AYRES, MSc HISTORIC BUILDING CONSERVATION GRADUATE
Your career: remastered

Doing a postgraduate degree can be a great investment in your future. It can open doors, create new and exciting opportunities, give you confidence and sharpen skills. Postgraduate accommodation

Become part of a great student community. We have residences exclusively for postgraduate students, located close to campus and the city centre.

“The accommodation was ideal, had everything I needed and it was a great place to make friends and meet people.”

NEIL WILSON, MSc DIGITAL MEDIA PRODUCTION GRADUATE

Commuting to Oxford is also an option, thanks to quick and affordable transport links with London and many other cities across the UK.

The Clive Booth Postgraduate Centre

The Clive Booth Postgraduate Centre is a purpose-built development which allows you to live exclusively with other postgraduates and mature students. Located just half a mile from our Headington Campus, it is a modern development that provides postgraduates with a sense of community.

The Postgraduate Centre forms part of Clive Booth Student Village complex, which is a larger student residential complex surrounded by landscaped grounds and trees.
If you are moving to Oxford for your studies there are also plenty of options to live in private rented accommodation throughout the city.

At a glance:
- 364 en-suite study bedrooms in flats of two to six people
- Choose from either a 38 or 50 week contract from £163.03 per week
- Laundry facilities, bike storage, a hall office and a postgraduate lounge with large study and social area
- Utility bills included
- A BrookesBus pass included, offering free transport between campuses, halls and into town
- High speed internet connection
- Basic contents insurance included
- Flexible contract lengths
- On-site security with on-call wardens
- Studio flats for couples
- Guaranteed accommodation for International students*
- Accommodation available for families*
- Accommodation suitable for wheelchair users.*

* contact us as soon as you can to check availability
Finance

Finance shouldn’t be an obstacle to studying. There are several options available to you as a postgraduate student. The UK government offers a Postgraduate Master’s loan of up to £10,609 (2018/19) or £10,906 (2019/20), and a Postgraduate Doctoral loan of up to £25,000 to help with course fees and living costs.

Scholarships and bursaries are also available for some courses. Please see our finance pages at www.brookes.ac.uk/finance for more information.

Other help

You might be able to get funding from:

- an individual – sometimes donations are made directly to the university for specific subject areas
- your employer – they might sponsor you if the course is relevant to your job
- a Disabled Students’ Allowance
- a Professional and Career Development Loan.

Postgraduate study at Oxford Brookes 2019/20
James Chaplin studied BSc Chemical Engineering, but wanted to follow a more commercial career path. Here, he discusses how the MSc Finance programme greatly increased his job prospects in the commercial sector.

“Throughout my whole undergraduate degree I knew I wanted to do a business-related course. Having studied chemical engineering before, I thought it best to break into more of a commercial role and to do a Master’s in Finance really stuck out to me.”

This course helps students develop both academically and professionally, providing a strong foundation in finance. Key skills are developed, such as digital literacy, communication, presentation and team working.

“I’m really looking forward to the financial modelling course. I think that it is going to transfer well into jobs. That’s one of the other good things about this course – I had time for all my job applications in the first term. We had a good winter break, so that was good timing for all my interviews.”

This course is supported by our Careers Service, where an emphasis is put on CV development and interview skills. The MSc Finance is ideal for those wanting to work in the financial sector or pursue a career in business.

“I have got a few offers – a commercial role within an energy company, a financial services job in the city and also a banking job in New York. I’m deciding at the moment, but yeah it’s definitely opened up any industry I want.”

James graduated with a distinction in MSc Finance, funded by the John Henry Brookes Scholarship. He currently works as Senior Analyst at EDF Energy.

Adrian-Constantin Alexandresco chose Oxford Brookes to study his MArchD because of the specialisms available.

Having completed his BSc (Hons) Architecture, Adrian-Constantin knew what he was looking for from his MArchD in Applied Design. Oxford Brookes offered a good diversity of first-year modules without choices limiting second-year options.

“This was really cool because I got to interact during studies with people who had worked on completely different projects in the first year. The tutors were amazing. I found the whole experience complex and spectacular.”

The Oxford Brookes MArchD Applied Design in Architecture is taught by tutors who have a good variety of specialisms. An additional benefit is that students work alongside other students with varying viewpoints and research areas.

Adrian-Constantin works at Fluid Architecture in London. He undertook a short research project in Colombia and has worked in China and Morocco. He can see himself working abroad again in the future.

“I want to get my Part 3 but it’s more important for me to grow as an architect and designer at this point, and travel with work while I am young and just keep exploring.”

“What made me set my heart on this course at Oxford Brookes was that the lecturers help and encourage students to build connections in the industry, whether through work experience or the many events hosted by the faculty. Neil Wilson came from a marketing background, but wanted a more hands-on, creative career. With some experience in video production, he wanted to develop his skills further. He found the MSc in Digital Media Production would equip him with the skills needed to work in the creative industries.

Taught by industry professionals with a wide range of expertise and connections in industry, students get the practical experience needed to enhance their career prospects.

“I chose the course as it covered a wide area of digital media subjects, but above all there was a focus on it being practical. I wanted the opportunity to develop skills which I could use straight away in industry and improve my employability.”

Industry standard tools (such as Avid, Maya, After Effects) and the excellent facilities help students get the hands-on experience they need. In addition to this, students are supported by academics on a one-to-one basis when required.

Students benefit from being part of a large faculty, as it opens up unique opportunities, such as research collaborations and industry connections. Students can also be part of the award-winning Brookes TV and learn the art of news production.

“I personally feel that without doing this course I wouldn’t be in my current content manager role. It gave me the skills and knowledge that I needed and has given me confidence for my future career path.”

“The location of the university lends itself well to carrying out fieldwork in a variety of unique habitats. For example, it is surrounded by Sites of Special Scientific Interest including Otmoor, Shotover and Wytham Woods to name a few.”

JONATHAN RAMSEY, MSc CONSERVATION ECOLOGY

“I decided to come to Oxford Brookes as the course is unique in combining two aspects of what interests me the most: wildlife conservation and primates. The MSc is all about developing each student’s skills according to their interests and ambitions and directly applying the theory to their future careers.”

CAMILLE N.Z. COUDRAT, MSc PRIMATE CONSERVATION

Key to Course List:
FT/PT Full-time/Part-time  DL Distance learning  MRes Master of Research  MSc Master of Science  PGCert Postgraduate Certificate  PGDip Postgraduate Diploma

Unless otherwise stated courses start in September. All courses are subject to change, but were correct at the time of going to print.
After finding that a successful job in HR wasn’t fulfilling her, Jackie Jobes decided to study a master’s degree at Oxford Brookes to pursue her lifelong passion for wildlife and ecology.

Jackie’s experience as an MSc Conservation Ecology student helped her to secure her first environmental role as Environmental Project Co-ordinator for global engineering firm AECOM.

“I have been passionate about wildlife and ecology since I was a child, and wanted a course that could actually give me the practical standing that employers value, not just the academic stamp. In the end, Oxford Brookes ticked all the right boxes – fees, accreditation, practical and theoretical balance, location, facilities and course content.”

Jackie credits her dissertation for being the key to her success and getting the jobs she has always wanted. Her current position of Partnership Manager at Gloucestershire Local Nature Partnership is testament to that.

“My dissertation was so valuable to my success in securing jobs after completing my studies. Work done even as a student can contribute greatly to the sector. My dissertation really was a clear accumulation of what I had learnt and was the evidence of my capabilities to employers. My dissertation has also taken me to conferences, presenting my work all over Europe and the UK. I don’t think students realise just how powerful their studies, particularly their dissertation, can be and can contribute considerably to their future prospects.”

Jackie now works alongside many organisations with a shared interest in giving nature a stronger voice, including Gloucestershire Wildlife Trust, where her university work is still being utilised to inform some of their projects – proving just how important her studies have been for both her and the sector.

“The opportunity to share your opinion with other people and look at a subject from different angles is beautiful. The fact that we are international also makes this very special. The knowledge, the experience, the international environment – it gives a good advantage and will definitely help me with my career in the future”

ANNA BEZUGLAYA, MSc BUSINESS MANAGEMENT GRADUATE
Sarah Rogers says her MBA gave her a great foundation for good business practice – and a toolkit that she continues to use on a daily basis.

Since completing the MBA, Sarah has developed a wide range of community and arts based projects. This includes Photo Oxford, the city’s first photography festival.

As someone who comes from an arts background, Sarah liked the entrepreneurial focus of the Oxford Brookes MBA and the way it harnessed real-world thinking and problem solving.

“We went to a remote village in the Brecon Beacons where we were looking at how to aid community development through social enterprise. We had two and a half days to come up with our ideas and present back in a Dragons’ Den style. It was such an exciting way to work.”

“One of the most valuable things I learnt was how to use a practical toolkit – a framework of simple processes when putting together pitches for finance, marketing and other business partnerships. It’s an approach that ensures I am competitive and persuasive. I use it all the time.”

One of Sarah’s latest enterprises is working with St Paul’s Church in Hammersmith running a community hub for charities involved in West London businesses.

“I’ve been able to create common ground and link these very different communities together – and that’s very satisfying.”

The Oxford Brookes MBA is in the top 10 for the fifth year running.

“When researching into possible places to study, Brookes stood above the rest because of its outstanding Ofsted report and reviews from former students.”

STEPHEN GREENWOOD, PGCE PRIMARY
Grant Chapman-Clarke’s undergraduate degree was in Media and Technology, but it was his time as Student Union President that sparked his interest in policy making.

“It was during my time as an undergraduate that my experiences as President of the Student Union sparked my interest in education policy making. After graduating I took a year out and looked for a course that would appeal to my interest. I chose the MA Education, at Oxford Brookes as I want to pursue a career in education.”

The MA in Education offers a flexible approach to your learning. You can choose to study full-time, part-time or via distance learning with the majority of the teaching being completed online. As the majority of the students study the course via distance learning you will have classmates from all over the UK.

“One of the best aspects of the course is that the lecturers have a keen interest in how technology is being used to inform learning. This is an area that I’ve found interesting and stimulating. One of my favourite modules featured policy making and the philosophy behind it. I’ve managed to build my interests into my MA, so I’ve been able to specialise in the areas of education, technology and policy.”

Graduating with an MEng in Mechanical Engineering, Calum Paterson realised he wanted to work somewhere fast-paced. Studying MSc Motorsport Engineering helped him to pursue his passion.

“I was lucky to have come across the Brookes Formula Student team at a competition when I was doing my MEng. I was impressed by the calibre of students and further research revealed great facilities. The university’s links with industry cemented my decision to pursue an MSc at Oxford Brookes.”

Our location in the heart of the UK’s Motorsport Valley with close proximity to the majority of Formula 1 teams and their supply chain gives Oxford Brookes unrivalled access to motorsport companies. Taught by experts in their fields in purpose-built facilities, we prepare our students for work in the motorsport industry.

“The teaching staff exceeded my expectations. The Vehicle Dynamics lectures were full of interesting anecdotes and real world examples, which made a challenging subject fun. Industry connections were better than expected.

I was one of a group of students selected to visit Ferrari and Dallara in Italy which was a fantastic experience.”

“I now work for Prodrive’s Advanced Technology division. I have been involved with developing the first hybrid-powered Transit vans for Ford, luxury car interior consoles and am now working on the hydraulic system for an upcoming hypercar. I’m in my last year towards my chartership with the IMechE with the help of my mentor at Prodrive, and I’m looking forward to continuing to learn new things!”

After building a well-established career in the car industry, Anne Youngson decided to take early retirement and return to academia becoming a lifelong learner. She chose to study the MA Creative Writing.

Anne had enjoyed solving practical problems in the car industry, but had always been scribbling away in the background. Her decision to return to studying allowed her to rediscover her passion for writing, bringing her scribbles to the forefront and developing them into acclaimed books such as Meet Me at the Museum, which was shortlisted for the Costa First Novel Award in 2018.

“I don’t think I would have ever got to write this book if I hadn’t signed up to the MA course at Oxford Brookes. Although I have always been writing, I haven’t necessarily been writing with a focus or to a deadline."

Anne’s course is led by acclaimed writers and an impressive line-up of visiting fellows including Philip Pullman, Sarah Dunant, Nick Cohen and Patience Agbabi. They supplement the teaching with sessions once every two weeks, adding new dimensions to the learning experience and helping students on the path towards publication.

The course has enabled many students to develop into accomplished creative writers, successfully publishing their own work in various formats.

“The support and encouragement of the tutors and staff at Oxford Brookes is brilliant. I like the way the tutors lead and guide us, but also enable students to express themselves and engage with the subject areas in a lively and creative way.”

ALFRED AMADU VEENOD FULLAH, LLM LAW GRADUATE

There is a lively Student Law Society to widen your interests and introduce aspects of law not covered formally.

After an exciting career in police and military forces around the world, Jason Howard decided to switch to the aid and development sector by studying for an LLM in International Human Rights Law at Oxford Brookes University.

He now works for UNICEF, the world’s leading children’s humanitarian organisation, on operations around the globe.

“Having LLM after your name does make you stand out from the crowd. For my dissertation I wrote about the Convention on the Rights of the Child, which I think helped me land a job here at UNICEF. That flexibility with the choice of dissertation helped me into my new career. Brookes’ reputation as a good, solid university helps very much in the job market.”

The School of Law offers a number of postgraduate qualifications with different specialist areas including economics, trade, globalisation and development. Students also build their experience through pro bono work and have won awards in national and international mooting competitions.

Students are thoroughly prepared for a competitive sector, benefiting from industry connections and networking opportunities with prospective employers. Those on the Graduate Diploma in Law conversion course, for example, are offered mentoring by practising barristers and some have already secured pupillage contracts.

From MSc Marketing graduate to business owner – in one step

Cristina de Sus successfully pitched Miss Frida – a sustainable babywear company – in the Enterprise Support awards competition. Wanting to expand on the sustainable offering, she became involved with The Embroidery Project. Here Cristina worked with indigenous artists in rural Mexico. It was here that she became inspired to create unique dresses with stories of women’s empowerment behind them. Talking of her experience, she said:

“I decided to take part in the Enterprise Support competition after being part of the OBSEA (Oxford Brookes Social Entrepreneurship Awards) programme in 2017, which enabled me to turn Miss Frida from concept to reality. After I developed the first samples, I wanted to carry on in 2018 and develop it further. I also liked the idea of having a mentor there who can support you.”

Cristina’s next steps include launching the Miss Frida debut collection on their website.

CHRISTINA DE SUS, MSc MARKETING GRADUATE
After graduating in Mechanical Engineering in India, Sameer Rana was working alongside his father's business. It was during this time that he found himself more interested in marketing, as it allowed him to be creative.

“When researching universities, I found Oxford Brookes to truly stand out for a number of reasons. The modules, such as brand and innovation and customer understanding, matched what I really wanted to get out of the course.”

Our MSc Marketing uses live case studies, consultancy projects and skills workshops. We encourage innovative and creative approaches to your learning so that you develop all the key transferable skills employers are looking for.

“This course met my expectations and in many cases exceeded my expectations as well. Modules were taught using real life examples from major marketing campaigns. I think it was a great way to show how to implement theory into practice. It helped shape how I think as a marketer and I implement those learnings today.”

Sameer has been working with Amazon for four and a half years and is currently working as the EU Marketing Manager for Amazon Fashion. As part of his current role he project-manages flagship events – such as Black Friday across Europe.

“As for the future, I would like to continue to learn and grow into senior roles and keep enjoying marketing. As long as I’m stretching myself and learning new skills, I feel satisfied.”

Postgraduate study at Oxford Brookes 2019/20
Nabeela Talib’s childhood led her to choose social work for a career. She reflects on why Oxford Brookes University was her first choice.

Nabeela grew up with the foster children that her parents took care of. For seven years she lived with an unaccompanied asylum seeking child from Afghanistan. She watched him struggle growing up in the UK and eventually flourish into a successful adult. This experience influenced her desire to study sociology.

A volunteer position at Asylum Welcome, based in Oxford allowed her to continue her research with an MA in Social Work.

“I chose Oxford Brookes because I admired the outreach work they did. My master’s at Oxford Brookes was transformative. A huge credit for this goes to the lecturers, practice educators, supervisors and fellow students.”

Now she’s graduated Nabeela is teaching Social Work and has plans to pursue a PhD.

“I’d love to add to the field of social work with asylum seekers, with a focus on immigration detention. This is a landscape that is constantly changing in relation to policy and laws, so I’d love to explore this in my PhD, whilst looking at the ways in which social workers can intervene and work in this area.”

Prachi Rampuria studied MA Urban Design at Oxford Brookes and is now working as an urban designer at PDP London.

“I was hired as an urban designer to help develop the urban design portfolio. We’ve been working on projects in a lot of different contexts and also on different scales – ranging from a master plan on 700 hectares in pristine Cuba, to understanding what the interface would be with a public space for a very small building in London. Because of this range, the learning curve has been quite immense, and it’s been a great opportunity to apply what we learnt back at Oxford Brookes in practice.”

Postgraduate study at Oxford Brookes 2019/20
Before coming to Oxford Brookes, Sean Vincent Kelly studied HND Town Planning at Glasgow Metropolitan College. Sean’s employer sponsored him to complete his planning master’s on a part-time basis, which took him as far afield as Brazil.

“Oxford Brookes has a reputation as one of the best planning schools and has a great location with a fantastic campus and facilities. Study planning at Oxford Brookes if you want your CV to have the edge over other candidates!”

Sean specialised by taking modules in developing and transitional regions and travelled to Brazil to undertake an urban design project. Here he worked on an exciting project exploring opportunities for social housing and improved infrastructure in Brazil.

“Being part of this project enhanced many of my skills, especially communication and research and influenced my future career aspirations by providing a unique international experience.”

Our MSc Spatial Planning is viewed as the first choice for planning training by a range of employers including local authorities, the Environment Agency and major planning consultancies. Frequent guest lectures from industry leaders give students the chance to make important contacts for their future career.

“Getting my first job was the best feeling. It’s really positive to know that everything you’ve learnt through school, college and university can be put to good use somewhere. I also had peace of mind that my course would easily lead to a good job because planners (particularly Oxford Brookes graduates) are in high demand!”

Since graduating Sean has been in full-time employment in very fulfilling planning jobs. These have included transport planning and social infrastructure planning. He is currently working at Surrey County Council as Senior Planner.

Postgraduate study at Oxford Brookes 2019/20
Before coming to Oxford Brookes, Xia Wu received a bachelor’s in Public Affairs Management (Real Estate Development and Management Pathway) at Shanxi University of Finance and Economics in China. It was her dream to study in Oxford.

“Real Estate at Oxford Brookes has a great reputation and it was my dream to study in Oxford. The course surpassed my expectations, with practice-based teaching, abundant field trips, intensive career events, small class sizes and perfect diversity.”

All MSc Real Estate students are paired with and mentored by recent graduates from the programme who support and help in careers’ advice, study and professional development. The majority of the teaching staff are professionally qualified as Chartered Surveyors, planners, lawyers or accountants – with each dedicated to providing excellent teaching. Learning is enhanced by external speakers, field trips and management support from the industry.

The programme has always enjoyed a very successful level of graduate employment. Our students find employment both in major international real estate consultancies and local firms.

“I do like challenging myself. Sometimes, I may get disappointed, but I mostly have got what I put in, no matter what – whether it was studying at Oxford Brookes or trying to get a job in London. It is so satisfying to get good results from long-term projects or pieces of work.”

After graduating Xia is hoping to put what she has learned into practice and get her dream job in London.

Martin Wikøren Mogstad had lived in Norway all his life and decided to come to the UK to experience a new challenge. After his undergraduate degree he began studying for his MA in International Studies (now International Relations).

Martin had always been interested in politics and political issues so decided to study MA International Studies. He chose the course at Oxford Brookes as it engages with many interesting contemporary issues.

“The best things about the course are the lecturers, the seminars and of course the students you study with. All of it really! Also the atmosphere in Oxford is truly amazing. The history of the city and the people you meet at university really make it – and the facilities in Oxford itself really help with your studies.”

Students on this course have access to a dynamic, supportive and growing community of scholars undertaking internationally recognised research in International Relations. There is also a rich programme of research seminars with presentations from high-profile external guest speakers. At Oxford Brookes we have a reputation for excellence in teaching with strong links between course content and the work of our research-active academic staff.

“I really enjoyed my time at Brookes and would recommend the University to anyone. The Faculty of Humanities and Social Sciences has a lot of great, dedicated lecturers who will do their best and beyond to help you succeed! Next I hope to do a PhD related to my master’s dissertation on socio-ecological security.”

Before enrolling on the MSc Applied Sport and Exercise Nutrition course at Oxford Brookes, Felicity Hares was working in a clinical NHS role. She had always wanted to focus her nutrition career into high performance sport.

“Oxford Brookes appealed to me for three key reasons: the applied, hands-on element of the course, the beautiful dynamic city of Oxford and the award of the International Society for the Advancement of Kinanotherapy (ISAK) Level One Anthropometry Certificate at the end of the course.”

High-profile speakers from the food industry, government and research bodies are regularly invited to present at our nutrition seminar series. This keeps our students up-to-date with current thinking on nutrition, food and policy topics.

“The course has given me a solid foundation of knowledge and skills in physiology and nutrition for sporting performance, and has challenged and built on my undergraduate nutritional science education.”

Talking of how this course helped her to change her career path to one that she has always wanted:

“Since graduating I’ve been working for Sport Wales, Welsh Gymnastics and London Bridge Hospital. My long-term aim is to work as a performance dietician in a high-performance sports institute and this course has definitely helped me to get there!”
