SECTION 2: WHY STUDY THIS PROGRAMME?

The creative industries are seen as driving growth and innovation not only in the UK but in many other economies around the world. The UK's creative industries are growing at almost twice the rate of the wider economy. This programme gives students the skills, knowledge and confidence to work in the media in a range of roles. It is distinctive in its examination of the media both past and present, and its concentration on authorship, journalism and publishing. Industry functions and key practical skills are addressed alongside the importance of the media in society.

The programme aims to provide you with an academically rigorous and professionally relevant education. An integrated approach is taken within the core modules to reflect the interdisciplinary nature of media; elective modules enable you to pursue specialist areas of study relevant to your background, interests and career aspirations. You will develop as an independent learner culminating in your work on the major project or dissertation at the end of the programme.

Students grow their skills in design, multi-platform journalism and publishing and form an understanding of the different ways of presenting information and published content. There is an emphasis on writing, authorship and commercially-relevant journalism throughout the programme, and you will come out of the programme with a portfolio of content, across media formats, relevant to roles across the media and in other organizations where there is a need to communicate to external audiences.

Your study is grounded in up-to-date knowledge of the media, taught by experienced professionals and researchers. The curriculum develops from a foundation of theory and skills, such as in editorial, design, video, and marketing, and towards a focus on industry sectors and professional practice.

The programme offers a local, national and international context for your studies, alongside an understanding of the cultural importance of the media. There are regular field trips to industry organizations, events, newsrooms and editorial environments. Throughout the programme you will be working with your peers in teams, supporting one another and developing sophisticated team-working, communication, and problem-solving skills. At the same time you will accumulate skills in academic research and analytical thinking. You will have access to a dedicated IT suite with industry standard software such as Adobe Creative Suite, and use collaborative software tools such as Omnibook. Internationalization of the degree includes modules in international publishing and Chinese language and culture.

The programme is located within the Oxford International Centre for Publishing (OICP), a recognized brand within media education as reflected in its standing in university league tables. We use the centre name to promote our activities to a variety of external audiences and the OICP has a reputation for innovation and excellence in teaching and research. The Centre has extensive industry links and carries out professional development programmes and consultancy. It has also a network of international links that facilitate a range of opportunities from exchange semesters and language learning to international collaboration on projects. For example, in your second year you could go on exchange to our partner universities in Amsterdam or Stuttgart, or to universities in the USA or Australia.

The Centre is based in the beautiful city of Oxford, the home of global media companies and many media professionals in journalism and publishing. The city has more published writers per square mile than anywhere else in the world, and has been home to a host of famous authors from Tolkien and C. S. Lewis to Philip Pullman and Mark Haddon.

Aims of the programme

The overall aim is to deliver a high-quality programme in media, journalism and publishing that combines 'the search for rigorous knowledge and understanding with the development of students' creative and reflexive capacities in innovative ways', and one that is 'relevant to students' futures both in work and as citizens'. (2016 QAA Benchmarking statement)

More specifically the programme aims to:

- Provide students with a systematic and critical understanding of the principles and practice of media, journalism and publishing.
- Give a broad knowledge of the central role that communications, media, and cultural agencies play at local, national, international and global levels of economic, political and social organization.
- Cultivate a grounded awareness of the historical formation of the book, magazine, newspaper and new media industries, and their contexts and interfaces.
- Equip students for successful employment at a level of recognized standing in a wide range of media and communication organizations.

- Develop the disciplinary, professional and transferable skills that graduates need to progress successfully throughout their academic and professional lives.
- Inculcate habits of independent study and thought necessary for life-long learning and for further research or training

1. 4.2 PROGRESSION AND AWARD REQUIREMENTS

In order to achieve the expected depth of learning, progression is designed as follows:

For the BA (Hons) Degree, students must accrue 360 credits overall.

For the BA Ordinary Degree, students are required to accrue 120 credits in years 1 (level 4) and 120 credits in year 2 (level 5) plus 60 credits from year 3 (level 6), accruing 300 credits in total.

For the Named Diploma of Higher Education (Media, Journalism and Publishing), students are required to accrue 120 credits in year 1 (level 4) and 120 credits in year 2 (level 5), gaining a total of 240 credits overall.

Level 4

- Writing and Developing Content
- Understanding Contexts: The History and Culture of Media
- The Creative Industries
- Design and Technology
- Storytelling as Experience: Connecting brands with audiences
- Media Law and Ethics

Level 5

- Essential Journalism: News and Features
- The Book Publishing Industry
- Typographic Design for Page and Screen
- Media Marketing and Business
- Research and Data Analysis

and two modules from the following list:

- Oxford
- Journalism and Popular Culture
- Print Media and Society
- International Publishing
- Chinese Language and Culture

For the Diploma of Higher Education, students must complete 240 total credits of which 90 credits must be Level 5 or above.

For the Certificate of Higher Education, students have to complete 120 credits at least 90 of which must be at Level 4.

Part-time students

It is expected that students will study for a minimum of six years, passing each level over two years before progressing to the next level.

4.3 PROFESSIONAL REQUIREMENTS

The programme is accredited by Creative Skillset, and annual reports are submitted.

SECTION 5: TEACHING AND ASSESSMENT

5.1 LEARNING AND TEACHING

The programme draws on a variety of learning and teaching methods to support your learning and deliver the range of knowledge and skills required.

- Lectures give you the knowledge and framework for study that will enable you to achieve the learning outcomes for the module
- Seminars encourage you to engage in discussion with your tutors and peers to test your understanding and ability to apply ideas, to develop transferable skills, and to encourage deeper learning
- Practical workshops give you the opportunity to test, clarify, and apply your skills in, for example, video and audio
- Studio modules enable hands-on activities and the development of project work in our dedicated IT suite of Mac computers equipped with industry standard software
- The learning platform Moodle is used to offer extra resources and learning materials
- Field trips: those to the industry and events enable you to see at first hand what you have learnt during lectures and workshops; they will also develop your academic understanding, for example visiting libraries and places of literary importance
- Online and print publications offer the chance to write and edit copy, and put into practice typographic and other design work
- Student presentations offer the opportunity for self-evaluation and feedback from visitors from industry

The principle of progression has been designed into the curriculum. Level 4 modules are designed to provide a theoretical and practical foundation; at Level 5, you gain core competencies alongside developing your broader understanding of ideas and concepts; at Level 6 the modules offer in-depth study of industry sectors and professional practice. Level 4 modules provide the opportunity to develop disciplinary and professional skills, as well as transferable skills that are essential for successful study at intermediate and advanced levels at Levels 5 and 6. As you progress through the programme greater emphasis is placed on independent learning, more complex problem-solving, and research-orientated tasks: this culminates in the compulsory module Major Project or Dissertation. Learning outcomes in each module have been written with reference to appropriate level descriptors and Bloom's taxonomy. This ensures that the level at which you are tested and assessed becomes increasingly challenging as you progress through the programme.

Formally scheduled contact time for a typical module includes 36 hours of tutor-led sessions as well as feedback on assessment.

5.2 ASSESSMENT

The assessment strategy is designed to take a holistic view of the programme, and to ensure that assessment methods are wide ranging and challenging. Assessment methods within each module have been designed to enable students to demonstrate their achievement of the learning outcomes for that particular module. A variety of forms of assessment is used, as is appropriate in a programme where skills and knowledge are of equal relevance to employment and career progression as facility with academic theory and summative assessment. The following are possible types of assessment:

- Essays on academic or research topics

- Business reports and case studies
- Project work across areas such as design, apps, and different forms of publication
- Presentations in role
- Pitches of new ideas and concepts
- Video reports of news stories or documentary features
- Role plays using professional scenarios
- Teamworking assignments

The Level 6 module Creative Entrepreneurship is intended to help students with their personal positioning to engage with and enter the creative industries. The aim is to support students in the creation of an effective portfolio of content, across media formats, to facilitate their career progression.

Formative assessments are included at designated points in each module (for example, in seminars or workshops, and during discussion of your work in progress), ensuring that you receive regular, clear guidance on your work and advice on ways to improve it before you reach a summative assessment point.

For each single-module credit a student is expected to put in 150 hours of study, and assessments have been designed to ensure equity in the demands placed on student effort required, for example, the advised word limit for a 15-credit module set by the University is 3,000 per student. The marking criteria for each assessment task in a module are clearly articulated in each module handbook.

The university's assessment compact is introduced to students at induction and is available in the relevant handbooks. Emphasis is given to the compact throughout the programmes and each module guide has a clear explanation of the assessment compact and how it is applied.

5.3 GRADUATE ATTRIBUTES

Academic literacy is addressed through the development by students of critical thinking, reading, writing, speaking, and listening skills. This understanding is further developed through a range of assignment types, from business reports to the more traditional academic essay.

Research literacy is explicitly addressed in the module on Research and Data Analysis and is fully developed in the Major Project or Dissertation. Research skills are also developed through seminar preparation and case study work, and visits to libraries and archives.

Critical self-awareness and personal literacy is developed through the experience of being part of a highly motivated and diverse cohort of students, engaging in a variety of individual and group tasks. As part of the learning process, students are required to present to fellow students, and participate in seminar debate and discussion.

Digital and information literacy is developed through accessing relevant content from a range of sources. Students also grow their skills in design, digital journalism and publishing and form an understanding of the different ways of presenting information and published content.

Active citizenship issues arise through working in a diverse student cohort, with representatives from around the world. The examination of the culture of the media is an opportunity to stress its importance of its society throughout the world, addressing issues such as ethics, censorship and state support. Modules such as International Publishing and Chinese Language and Culture contribute to the internationalization of the curriculum.

SECTION 7: PREPARATION FOR EMPLOYMENT

The programme combines both academic and professional learning, and is targeted at a career in the media sector within the creative industries. The following is a list of common destinations but is in no way exhaustive:

- Creative Industries
 - Book Publishing
 - Magazine Publishing
 - Newspapers
 - Digital and Data Journalism
 - Public Relations
 - Social Media and Content Marketing
 - Communications
 - Radio and Television
 - NGOs
 - Arts Administration
2. Much of our success derives from our extensive links with industry in the UK and internationally. All members of staff have worked in the media and continue their connections through their research and consultancy. We have excellent relationships with publishing houses and trade organizations, and the OICP brand is widely respected. Our alumni are working in a variety of roles throughout the media and we currently have over 700 members of our alumni group on LinkedIn.
 3. Oxford is the home of many global publishing brands and media professionals. A range of visiting speakers from industry are invited during the programme and we run an annual careers day where students can speed-date with professionals from book, magazine and newspaper publishing. We have two members of staff who organize work placement opportunities for students; and our website advertises both work placements and jobs in the industry. Senior media professionals contribute to the work of OICP through our Industry Advisory Board.
 4. There are the opportunities for field trips and working at live events: for example, visits to media and journalism summits, international book fairs or working at the Oxford Literary Festival and the London Book Fair, all of which facilitate live reportage opportunities for aspiring journalists on our programme, enabling students to enhance their writing portfolios.
